

Abstract

A method and an apparatus check a computer system for blocked or incorrectly allocated memory areas, which can arise as a result of termination of a process which accesses the memory in addition to other processes. This is checked by recording a first state vector before the start of the process and a second state vector describing the state of the memory after termination. The two state vectors are then compared for a match.